Acknowledgement

Street children are the big challenge of the Nepal and the world. Increasing street children can be a very big problem of the world. Many organizations including the Government of Nepal are involving to reduce the number of the street children in Nepal. Reintegration of the street children in the family and community is a very big challenge. My attempt to study on reintegration of the street children after vocational training in Nepal and impact of vocational training is the special matter for me to the partial fulfillment of the requirement for Master Degree in Sociology.

First and foremost, I would like to express my sincere gratitude to respected thesis supervisor Mr. Keshab Silwal, who was supportive at each step of my study as well by his prompt response so, I am able to accomplish this thesis.

I would like to express my sincere gratitude to all the central Department of Sociology of Tribhuvan University for providing me an opportunity to be part of Master's program which enlarged my horizons of knowledge and made me able to learn. And again thanks to all the professor and lectures for central Department of Sociology.

I would also like to thank indebted to Mr Raju Ghimire, Deputy Director of Voice of Children for providing information, all the staff for the support and my parents for encouraging completing this thesis.
