ABSTRACT

This thesis entitled "Case System in English and Bajhangsi" is the first research work on the 'Case System of Bajhangsi'. This research has been conducted in order to find out the cases in Bajhangsi and to find out similarities and differences between Bajhangsi and English cases. The researcher collected data from both primary and secondary sources to conduct the research. The sample population was eighty native speakers of the Bajhangsi dialect, who were selected using judgemental/ purposive sampling procedure. A questionnaire was used as a tool for data collection. English cases were taken from secondary sources. The data were analyzed, interpreted and presented descriptively by using tables and illustrations. The major findings of this research clarify that Bajhangsi has a complex case system. This research shows that common cases in English and Bajhangsi are nominative, objective, instrumental, locative, possessive, dative, comitative, vocative and temporal. The main case markers in Bajhangsi dialect are the post-positions. Natural force is also taken as an instrument in the Bajhangsi dialect. Bajhangsi has more number of case markers than English but the Bajhangsi case markers are flexible in nature than English case markers. Some case markers in Bajhangsi are overused.

This thesis consists of four chapters. The first chapter deals with the introduction of the study. The introduction consists of definitions of language, importance of the English language, multilingual setting of Nepal, introduction to cases, cases in English and Nepali languages, contrastive analysis, literature review, objectives of the study and significance of the study. The second chapter deals with the methodology which in turn consists of sources of data, sampling procedure, research tool, process of data collection and limitations of the study. The third chapter is the core of the thesis. It is concerned with the analysis of the data along with comparison of English and Bajhangsi case systems. The fourth chapter deals with the findings and pedagogical implications of the study. This chapter is also followed by references and appendices.
