ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This thesis is an outcome of the continuous support and encouragement of many people. Firstly, I owe my sincere gratitude to my revered supervisor Dr. Lekha Nath Bhattarai, Lecturer Department of Economics, Prithivi Narayan Campus, Pokhara for his continuous guide and encouragement. It would not have completed in this form without his invaluable suggestion, guidance and regular inspiration.

I would also like to extend my sincere gratitude to the department of economics and Dr. Nagendra Lal Shrivastav, Head of the department along with all the members of the department for giving me an opportunity to undertake this study and necessary help.

I would like to extend my special thank to staff members of Regional library, P.N. Campus for their help in collection of required materials possibly, I would be unable to collect materials of literature review without their cooperation. I am equally thankful to all the authors and publishers whose books/articles became a source of light to guide me in the completion of this work.

At last, but not the least, I would like to share my deepest admiration to my family members, especially my parents who helped as continued source of inspiration and motivation to complete this research and brought me to this light of education.
